What is a Spouse Open Work Permit?

A Spouse Open Work Permit (SOWP) is a type of work permit that allows the spouse or common-law partner of a temporary foreign worker or international student in Canada to work for any employer, without needing a specific job offer. This permit aims to promote family unity and economic stability by enabling spouses to support their families while in Canada.

To be eligible for a Spouse Open Work Permit, you must:

1. Be the spouse or common-law partner of a skilled worker in an occupation under the National Occupational Classification (NOC) skill type 0, A, or B.
2. Be the spouse or common-law partner of someone who holds a valid study permit and is enrolled in a full-time post-secondary institution.
3. Hold valid temporary resident status in Canada.

Application Process

Applying for a Spouse Open Work Permit is relatively straightforward:

1. Prepare Your Documents: Gather necessary documents, including proof of relationship, your spouse's work or study permit, and your passport.
